
Conservation groups sue over outdated Gulf fishery management plan

By Kim McGuire | October 12, 2016 | Updated: October 12, 2016 4:22pm

0

Photo: Picasa, Shannon Tompkins/Chronicle

A tern tries to pluck an easy meal from the shrimp, crabs and small fish scattered by a school of redfish foraging in the shallows of a back-back flat in West Matagorda Bay. Hovering gulls and terns often can point anglers to the location of these shallow-water packs of reds. Houston Chronicle photo by Shannon Tompkins

To stay healthy, the Gulf of Mexico needs to receive a certain amount of fresh water.

To continue reading this story, you need to be a subscriber of the Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON★CHRONICLE
As low as $1 per week
Unlimited Digital Access

- HoustonChronicle.com
- eEdition
- App for iPhone and iPad

SUBSCRIBE

SIGN

IN

Email address

Password

Show password

Forgot password?

Keep me signed in

SIGN IN

By signing in, you agree to our Terms of Service and Privacy Policy

Kim McGuire

Science and environment reporter

HEARST newspapers

© 2013 Hearst Newspapers, LLC.